While it appears that security surrounds the purpose of [REDACTED] it is not asserted or established that the necessity for such security would prevent the filing of a claim of this nature through normal channels, i.e., Army Claims Service. It would seem, since [REDACTED] was still in the Army (although on terminal leave) and was flying in an Army airplane and was authorized to be transported either formally or informally by Maj. Gen. Curtis Le May, that it is possible to process his claim to the Army Claims Service. Further, under the Special Funds Regulations prescribed by the Director, CIG, there exists no authority for Special Funds to pay claims of this nature. Consequently, if it is established that the security factors involved prevent [REDACTED] from filing a claim through normal channels, it would be necessary to present this matter in appropriate form to the Director, CIG, for approval before payment could be made by Special Funds.
